FOSTERING THE FUTURE

A new resource for young people transitioning from foster care

Shaped by young adults with experience in foster care, the trailblazing Fostering the Future website helps young people transitioning from foster care understand what support may be available, connect with resources near them, and build a personalized plan for what comes next.

What young people can do

- Learn what support may be available to them.
- Find and navigate resources based on their needs and location.
- Find support related to housing, education, employment, healthcare, mentorship, benefits, and financial support.
- Explore Learning Modules with key information about relevant topics like financial literacy, available housing, Medicaid, applying for a drivers license, and more.
- Build a personalized plan, save progress, and return to it later.
- Choose what they want to explore and what belongs in their plan.

How professionals can use it

Share fosteringthefuture.gov directly with a young person, explore the website together, or use it as one resource alongside the guidance and support you already provide.

What to know

- The website is designed to complement, not replace, human support.
- Programs, eligibility, and availability can change. Finding a resource does not guarantee that a young person qualifies or that space is available.
- Young people can save a plan without creating an account or providing personal details that identify them.
- The initial release will not include every type of support a young person may need.
